The Town

By Dave Irland

Notes on select board meetings from March 23 through April 13

Transfer Station

This month's discussion over the transfer station began with Stanley Ross from the finance committee holding back approval of the special warrant article needed to vote funds for the proposed new transfer station at an estimated $314,000. Over the several meetings during which this was discussed, he mainly stressed that the town meeting article needs to be well prepared, "chapter and verse," to override both his and the town's possible skepticism.

Progress was made in the following weeks. Shawn Tryon, director of operations, explained to the board and to Mr. Ross that site borings had been done, an engineering firm was working on the plans for the proposal, and that he expected to have those plans in two weeks time. Mr. Ross felt that with those plans the finance committee would have a much more detailed picture, without which it was too early to comment on the finances.

Kenn Basler responded by repeatedly pointing out that since 1987, when the transfer station committee was first formed, the town had been "kicking the can down the road," and that very soon what he called "big safety" issues would take center stage.

At a subsequent meeting at which all these issues were again aired, Dennis Lynch brought up the topic of possible methane seepage from the nearby old landfill and organic waste, which was met with measured interest overall. Methane gasses from old landfills, according to him, had been known to cause explosions and loss of life in buildings sited near or on said landfills. Wayne Burkhart, select board chair, said it was now something that needed to be examined. Shawn Tryon agreed that although none of the official agencies involved (such as the DEP) has brought up the topic, and despite the completed site boring having passed inspection, it was a good idea to look into the methane risk since public safety is of primary importance. Larry Klein suggested trying to get a letter from the DEP signing off on the site as methane-free.

Another attendee at the meeting expressed dismay that he'd never been informed of the proposed project in detail. He also asked why the project was even necessary, to which Mr. Burkhart explained that every year the transfer station is flunked by the state inspector (citing issues such as bad traffic flow, no guardrails, crumbling dumpster pads, etc.). He was told that an article for the Monterey News on that specific topic was in the works. (See the Select Board Corner, p. 25)

Whenever the new transfer station does get commissioned, it is going to need an attendant, a frequent topic of discussion among the select board, Shawn Tryon, and others. The problem lies in the relatively specialized skill set this person will need in order to manage the relatively sophisticated recycling and traffic flow, as well as all the minutiae of a modern transfer station. It will be difficult for the highway department to fill this person's vacancies in the event of sick days or time off, given his or her special skill set. The discussion wasn't closed out in any way and will no doubt continue, as it ties in with the specifics of the contracts the town might make with haulers. Currently, Master Garbologist provides the attendant, but in the future the town is looking toward providing its own attendant to tighten control of the operation.

In the most recent meeting, Mr. Tryon presented to the board the promised set of transfer station drawings, prepared by Berkshire Geo-Technologies, and said that he was looking into "preliminary pricing." The board also got into a discussion of dual-stream versus single-stream recycling. Mr. Tryon said that he would make sure the station was designed for dual-stream (in which glass, plastic, and aluminum are separated from paper, requiring two containers as we have now) which would simply provide more space for single-stream should the town move to that in the future. He also assured the board that the roof would be designed to bear solar panels should the town want to make it a solar-powered facility at any point.

For more on the transfer station, see page 25.

Monterey Broadband

During the March 23 select board meeting, Stanley Ross, head of the finance committee, expressed concerns about the extent of debt the town may be taking on, particularly as it pertains to the WiredWest cooperative broadband project, given that at the time of the meeting only 17% of Monterey residents had pledged to subscribe to the service. Stan abstained from supporting the bond to finance the fiber optic infrastructure on the grounds that there were still too many uncertainties and contingencies. Larry Klein, former chair of the WiredWest technology committee, pointed out that approving the bond is not the same as actually borrowing the money should the town ultimately vote it down. Daniel Moriarity, also from the finance committee, felt strongly that it was not fair to ask Monterey residents to pay twice, once in the form of higher real estate taxes and again for phone and internet service, calling this "capricious and discretionary."

However, it was agreed by all parties present that having the select board and the finance committee speak, in Mr. Klein's words, "in a unified voice" would help broadband make its way into Monterey. Stanley Ross did assert his "total support" of broadband in Monterey in general terms, and stated that his concerns were strictly financial.

Larry Klein defended WiredWest's financial viability, citing its 70 to 80% subscription rate in many towns in which WiredWest hopes to operate, and so, realistically, he is not worried about the cooperative's ability to earn positive revenue. (As of April 17, on register.wiredwest.net, Monterey has reached 31% of the 40% subscription rate necessary.)

Select board member Kenn Basler reiterated that the town's solvency depends on real estate, and without modern infrastructure, including high speed broadband, property values will start to fall. Buyers for Monterey properties might look elsewhere in the face of poor internet access.

Town Hall Building

After reviewing various estimates for re-roofing the town hall, the board determined that the benefits of metal roofing outweigh the relatively small cost difference (roughly $60,000 to do the whole roof with metal versus $23,500 to $25,500 to do just the older half with asphalt singles). Metal roofing would have two to three times the service life of asphalt. At this point it needs to be determined whether it would make sense to split the roof into two separate re-roofing projects, since the town hall was roofed in halves at least ten years apart. This would cost the town quite a bit less in the short term. However, economies of scale will also figure into the final numbers, and it might prove more frugal in the long run to have it done all at once. Nothing has been decided so far.

Library Dam

The finance committee discussed with the board what is informally being called "the library dam." The Department of Conservation and Recreation has declined to pay for the cost of repairing the dam, as has the Army Corps of Engineers, due to it being a less-than-life-threatening situation. However, FEMA awarded the project a grant of $12,000 some time ago. These funds have been stored in "free cash" but have not yet been spent. Therefore, they can be considered part of the "special revenue" cash account and, as such, "ready to go," according to Muriel Lazzarini.

Town Government Management

The question of whether or not to hire a part-time town administrator came up again, as a way of smoothing out town hall functioning. Wayne Burkhart mentioned that if Joe Kellogg, interim town administrator of Chester, MA, could come in and teach the board about how the town hall works, hiring an administrator might not be necessary. He pointed out this might only cost the town about five hundred dollars, as opposed to adding a salary to the payroll. However, foregoing an administrator also might mean longer select board hours, though in his opinion, the board is not overworked.

Route 23 Paving Project

In a rare high point, Kenn Basler announced that the State of Massachusetts has granted Monterey $200,000 to replace approximately all forty culverts along Route 23, most of which are past their expected service life. This was very welcome news, given the uncertainty as to who was going to pay for the culverts, which, until now, had been left out of the Route 23 repaving project. Foresight Engineering, from Pittsfield, will be designing the project and also overseeing the contractor, Palmer Paving of Palmer, MA. The state will also have a supervising engineer on hand throughout the project. According to Mr. Tryon, Foresight's participation is welcomed by the state, as they would prefer not to have to come back for corrections or repairs.

The anticipated completion date is March 2016.

What follows is additional information from Shawn Tryon on the paving project.

The $200,000 for culvert replacement is in addition to the $3.5 million dollars allocated, which includes 10% for contingencies. Cost over-runs beyond this will be the responsibility of the town.

There will be three different approaches to the roadwork. Most of the road from the town lines with Great Barrington and Otis will be rebuilt in a similar fashion to the work done in selected sections a few years ago. The road will be ground down twelve inches deep, then the ground materials laid back down and compacted

Laurie Shaw retired after twenty-five years as a library trustee. Carol Edelman (left), also a former trustee, was present to celebrate Laurie's service, along with some of the original board members, Eileen Clawson, Linda Thorpe, and John Higgins. The original board Laurie was elected to also included Mark Mendel and Anne Marie Makuc.

as new roadbed. On top of these rebuilt sections will be a new 4.5 inch layer of asphalt. In the center of town the road surface will be milled down 1.5 inches, and then a new top layer applied. The rebuilt sections from before will also receive an additional topcoat of asphalt.

In addition, in some places, the guard rails will be removed, the shoulders scraped, and new guard rails meeting current standards will be installed.

Shawn tells us to expect some detours, which they will try to keep to a minimum, to become part of our driving experience this year. The town is looking at ways to help keep us informed of progress and the upcoming work. Monterey actually has little say over the project, as it has been contracted by the state, so information isn't easily available, but they will do what they can to keep us informed.

Town Election Candidates Statements

Candidates for all offices were invited to submit statements to the Monterey News. This year we have two contested seats, for select board and zoning board of appeals. Below are the statements we received.

Select Board (3 years)

Steven Weisz

I love Monterey. It is my home. I can't think of any place that I would rather live. Because of this, I have deeply immersed myself in all aspects of Monterey life; from the arts and culture, to the operations at town hall.

What I have learned is that when the people of our town work together, support each other, and keep the lines of communication open, we can do anything (anyone remember "Monterey lights the way"?)

What I have also learned is that when we stop talking to each other, withhold our support for Monterey's institutions, or take a 'hands off' approach to town government, we all lose.

That is why I am running for select board.

During the course of this year, you might have heard Monterey described as a "$4.5 million business that is hard to manage." This is true. However, where I differ is my belief that an engaged, supportive and cohesive select board is what is needed to keep the management challenges of our town under control.

Why am I so sure? Because I have actually run three companies and I know from experience what it takes to manage a business and inspire people. I am actually pretty good at it.

Folks, there are no quick fixes. We need to get our own house in order before looking to add a town administrator or additional layers of government.

I have worked hard to build a solid, respectful, and professional relationship with the employees of the town and with your other selectmen, Kenn Basler and Scott Jensen. I am eager to join them to form a select board that will serve you, and the town of Monterey, well.

I live on Bidwell Road. I am a semi-retired businessman and former actor.

During my lifetime, I have owned and operated three businesses, sat on the boards of various institutions from the arts and historical societies, to planning and zoning boards, to business development and Chambers of Commerce.

This year, I have served Monterey as the chairman of the Historic Commission, treasurer of the local Cultural Council, committee member for the selection of our director of operations, and as a member of the town hall structure committee.

I have also represented Monterey at the Southern Berkshire Regional School

Jon Sylbert

Dear Monterey Residents,

As I wrote in the Monterey News last month, I've decided to run for Select Board after a three-year hiatus.

Local governance has become more complex over recent years, and the town has now reached a critical juncture where greater demands of time and professional experience are required from town leaders. The town hall restructure committee has begun a serious exploration into hiring a part-time town administrator—shared with another town—to provide the kind of expertise necessary to support the board in running a municipality with a nearly $4 million gross budget and dozens of employees and appointed and elected officials. As it turns out, our neighboring town of New Marlborough also is currently exploring this same option, and we would be wise to coordinate with them on securing such services jointly. I'd like to make sure this opportunity is realized rather than squandered.

Also, after ten years on the board and three years off, I've been made keenly aware of the frustrations many residents feel about participating in town governance. Tolerance for differing opinions and opposing views has been increasingly in short supply, and many people who attend town meeting find it impossible to ask questions, share their opinion, or vote their conscience with their voices or hands. This is the downside of small-town life, where no one wants to publicly vote against articles their friends and neighbors support. Instead, everyone votes for everything, or remains silent, so that each voter's preferred articles pass. It's an unspoken "you vote for my pet project and I'll vote for yours." We all go home getting what we wanted, but secretly resenting other expenditures we must now pay for.

In all my years on the select board, I've always felt my foremost duty was to provide the public with all the information they need to vote knowledgeably, but I now believe it may also be necessary to provide them with the privacy to do so securely. Using an electronic voting system might be a good solution, one that would encourage both more attendance and more participation at town meeting.

As always, I encourage all of you to attend town meeting on Saturday, May 2, and to come out and vote for the candidate of your choice on Tuesday, May 5. Your opinions matter most and deserve to be heard.

My wife Lisa and I moved to the Berkshires twenty years ago and have raised our two sons in Monterey. I work for an economic and educational nonprofit and Lisa works as a sign language interpreter for the deaf. I was a planning board member for one term and a Select Board member for ten years, during which time the Southern Berkshire Regional School District negotiated a very contentious and critical restatement of our agreement. Monterey was also involved in many other important issues—too many to mention here—while I was on the Select Board. I'm the president of the Monterey Preservation Land Trust, and Lisa is on the library board, and we, our children, and my mother, who lives around the corner from us, have enjoyed the pleasure of growing and changing along with the rest of you here in town. If we could make one small adjustment, it would be to switch our zip code to 93940, where our west coast sister town sits on a Pacific bluff, at least between January and April.

Zoning Board of Appeals (5 yrs.)

Ian Jenkins

I am seeking the open seat on the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) that Cynthia Weber has ably held for many years. For the past several years I have served as an alternate on the Board and participated in a number of decisions.

The ZBA is entrusted with reconciling the by-laws of Monterey regarding land use, specifically zoning requirements and the changes property owner wish to make to their properties.

In the early 1970's zoning was introduced in Monterey. Motivated by a thrust to preserve the rural character of the community the town created the framework of our land use policies. Maintaining this rural character has thrived partially due to the success of and the use of zoning, land placed in conservations trusts, agricultural protection and the high cost of building lots. understood our values, and worked hard to implement them.

We face, currently, some unique challenges. Of the approximately 850 dwellings in Town, it is estimated that 42% are non-conforming. In order for a homeowner to modify a non-conforming structure, a "Special Permit" is required, which entails a hearing, by the ZBA.

Many of the non-conforming dwellings were constructed during the boom after WWII in the 1950's and 60's. Often they were constructed on less than half-acre lots and with minimum set-backs. They were frequently constructed around our waterfronts. Additionally, there are many other dwellings around town that are non-conforming.

The non-conforming properties at the time zoning was introduced were "grandfathered in" and the non-conforming issues were tolerated. However, houses, like people, age and require upkeep and structural renovations. Non-conforming properties require a special permit for modification. Additionally, homeowners have aspirations for their property and how they want to enjoy them has evolved. Adding contemporary structural amenities or a deck can further enhance the pleasure of the property.

It is within this framework that the ZBA works. How do we balance the evolving needs of the homeowner, the By-Laws of the Town and commonsense. The courts give great latitude and respect, to the local ZBA, to work within the guidelines to determine what is "detrimental to the community" when denying a permit. One must remember that the ZBA is not implementing it's own ideology of land use policy but rather are implementing that of the town as written by the Planning Board.

We are all concerned with environmental issues. I have heard it said, that we must "incorporate or make use of" environmental policy in the deliberations of the ZBA. This is a disingenuous appeal and those efforts with regards to environmental concerns should be directed towards the Planning Board.

I came to Monterey in 1983 as a weekender and evolved quickly into a year-round resident. During the mid 90's I was on the board of directors for the Monterey News for many years. I was very active with the 1997 Sesquicentennial Celebration of the town. I served as the associate editor of the two hundred page souvenir book about the town's history along with Peter Murkett (editor). I researched and wrote several articles relating to and about land use policy and history in Monterey. I firmly believe we must take the best values from the past, see why they were successful, understand how they were implemented, use the lessons, and accommodate to our Town's future.

I feel prepared and qualified to assume the responsibility of sitting on the ZBA. I ask for your vote.

Planning Board (2 years)

Pat Salomon

The Monterey Planning Board has the specific task of evaluating plans for land division and permit applications, as reflected in Monterey's Zoning by-laws, or drafting for the community new by-laws. While sitting in with the Planning Board as a temporary appointee, I got a sense of how serious their decisions are, and how thoroughly the planning board must, and does, weigh plans brought before them. I heard important input from competing interests in the community and could see how these must be balanced. The Planning Board stands at the center of important challenges for Monterey. How do we both preserve what is unique, time-tested, and wonderful about Monterey, and at the same time help it move into the future, meeting currently unmet needs? I'd like to contribute to this process.

Parks Commission (3 years)

Kelly Tryon

Having served one year on the Parks and Recreation Commission, I have come to learn how the commission plays a huge role in the Monterey community. Working alongside the other commission members, I will strive to maintain the commission's commitment to providing quality parks and recreation facilities for the town.

I have been a resident of Monterey since 2007 and a homeowner here since 2012. For the past five years, I have been a CPR- and EMT-trained first responder with the Monterey Fire Company. I have also done volunteer work for the Berkshire National Fish Hatchery, Gould Farm, and the Southern Berkshire Volunteer Ambulance Squad. I have a master's degree in geochemistry, am a registered geologist, hold an instrument pilot license, and like to fish.

I retired from a 33-year career with the Aluminum Company of America (ALCOA) in 2003, mainly working as a manager of air, solid waste, and groundwater issues in the corporate office. I am familiar with both state and federal regulations on air and solid waste pollution as well as groundwater problems. I have extensive experience with both ambient and workplace exposures in those three areas and their effects on human, animal, and plant health. I would enjoy further serving the town of Monterey.

Memorial Day Activities in Monterey

Veterans Memorial Ceremony

The public is invited to join the 19th annual Monterey Memorial Day Observance at 11 a.m., May 25, 2015. The ceremonies will take place at Veterans Memorial Park, at the intersection of Route 23 and Blue Hill Road. This is a ceremony to honor war dead from all the past wars our nation has fought, beginning with the Civil War. Once called Decoration Day, when Americans decorated the graves of soldiers lost in combat, it has become a memorial to their contribution to the nation. At the same time, it gives us pause to reflect on the human price of war.

Program speakers Pastor Elizabeth Goodman, Mary Kate Jordan and George Emmons will help prompt our reflections, as program speakers. Command Sergeant Major Julio Rodriguez will lead a twelve-gun salute by a rifle squad of veterans.

—Veterans Memorial Committee

Memorial Day Parade

At 1 p.m. we will have our traditional town parade starting at the junction of Sandisfield Road and Route 23 and parading down through the center of town and ending at the firehouse pavilion. There will be a short remembrance service in front of the church where the select board will lay wreaths commemorating the fallen in past wars. As always, there will be hot dogs and ice cream for all at the parade's end at the firehouse, and music by FirePitt.

MEREDITH OISLANDER OWNER

Candidates' Forum April 18

Jon Sylbert and Steven Weisz appeared Saturday, April 18, in the basement of the meetinghouse, each hoping to fill the upcoming vacancy left by the retiring select board chairperson, Wayne Burkhart. Nearly forty people interested in what they might have to say joined the candidates. The Monterey News sponsored the forum, with Liz Goodman and Stephen Moore as moderators.

Steven Weisz was first with opening remarks, and sketched out his typical day in Monterey, a town he told the crowd he "fell in love with" on arrival, consequently having since that time "immersed himself in all things Monterey."

If elected, Mr. Weisz says he would like to address town hall and police department squabbles, concentrate on finishing projects (Monterey is engaged in many), attempt to invigorate agriculture, (according to him, "what made Monterey great"). He noted his work on the Town Hall Structure Committee, and that he has an interest in improving lines of communication between employees.

Mr. Weisz told the audience that his interest in running was inspired by the family-like atmosphere of the town, and expressed his passion for working within that family to make the town safe and affordable.

In John Sylbert's opening statement, as a former select board member, he pointed out that "about fifty to fifty-five percent" of the audience were current or former town employees or officials, and took the opportunity to express an ongoing interest in engaging more of the rank-and-file townspeople in the goings on at town hall. He pointed out that the people in attendance represented the thousand (give or take) who live in Monterey, and suggested the relatively small turnout as symptomatic of the problems with local government. "Government is in the business of providing services to the town," he said, and the essence of governing lay in figuring out "what we want, how much it will cost, and can we make it work."

Having been in town twenty years, he has seen that the job of selectman is not avidly sought after, and feels that in a larger sense volunteerism and small government is at risk. He further noted that Monterey runs on an approximately four-million-dollar budget, essentially a business, and one that is "way more complex" than in the past. The reason he seeks a seat on the board, after a three-year hiatus, is to simply "find more help to run the town."

A question was asked regarding an issue that's been discussed of late: How would the candidate approach the question of changing certain elected positions to appointed (i.e., more "professional") employees, as the complexity of the town government increases over time?

Mr. Sylbert pointed out that Monterey is the last town with such a large budget that doesn't have a professional administrator. The town is not, he joked, a communist country, and basically "works great." He said the people involved in the direct democracy of town meetings "have a ball" working through the warrant, but the town was in fact at a tipping point in the direction of needing professional help with day-to-day operations. However, he still believes in elected positions "across the board," despite the fact that not a lot of folks are looking for those jobs. He further pointed out that the risk in using appointments is that they "concentrate power." He offered, as a specific example of the need to keep many positions elected, that the finance committee should absolutely remain an elected board so they maintain the independence to develop their own budget with which to compare to the recommendations of the select board.

Mr. Weisz felt that first and foremost, all Monterey positions needed to be held by Monterey residents, though as the complexity of running the town increases, there was the risk of asking too much of elected officials. The complexity of a four-million-dollar budget is only increased if said elected official isn't experienced.

Mr. Weisz also pointed out that most town clerks are appointed, due to the importance of the job and the fact that he or she needs to be there all week long. With the big second-home population of Monterey, much of their activity at town hall needs to happen on weekends. Appointed officials could have their work times established for them, whereas elected officials can set their own times.

He then went on to ask, rhetorically, if the town wants to cede the responsibility of running a four-million-dollar budget to an in-town person when someone from outside of Monterey might in fact have more skills.

He added that from his work on the town hall structural committee, he'd seen town hall employees express frustration that there was no "go to" person on the board for answers, but cautioned that "once you add a layer of government, it's hard to remove it," and that, therefore, it was important to try the simplest way first. He expressed an interest in seeing through the process of the structural committee's work and recommendations, suggesting that perhaps the town could hire some consultants to help better organize town management. But in the end, if it became necessary, he said he was "one hundred percent" in favor of a town administrator, if the board decided to go that way.

The next question from the moderators concerned the scope of the many projects facing the town: What tools or strategies would you recommend for helping the town assess, plan for, and balance the needs of the many large projects facing the town?

Mr. Sylbert felt that a ten-year capital budget was important, which is not news: it is why the town has a finance committee.

Projects, he felt, come and go "in waves," and it is necessary to spread them out over time as much as possible to even out the debt load on the town; to borrow if necessary; and most importantly, to maintain "transparency with the town." Mr. Sylbert also mentioned the way that projects get "bunched up," and mentioned the need for long-range planning, and if a project can wait, "great."

Mr. Weisz agreed with Mr. Sylbert, but added the importance of researching projects to assess their level of necessity. He stated that, as a way to help the community center project, he still believes in selling the Bally Gally house on the community center property, which he believed would be within the dictates of Edith Wilson's will.

There were many questions from the audience on a wide range of town issues.

Larry Klein, WiredWest Technical Advisor, asked a question initially directed at Mr. Sylbert, who he had not seen at any of the meetings concerning WiredWest, "How does Monterey move forward with broadband, which will be a major investment?"

Mr. Sylbert answered that the town needed high-speed broadband, no question, pointing out that the free-market system in communications in Massachusetts will not serve rural areas. He further claimed that he'd be willing to put up a thousand dollars himself to support it. However, he was concerned about the fact that the costs won't be shared equally among townspeople, pointing out potential hook-up fees for people, and that Verizon currently has a "box by the fire station" capable of providing a 10-mega-bytes-per-second internet connection. If they saw fit to activate it as a way of offering a lower cost alternative, the WiredWest bond could become a burden. He then strongly encouraged everyone in town to sign up for the refundable forty-nine-dollar pledge on the WiredWest site to "push it as far as we can."

Mr. Weisz said that he "hands down" votes for better internet access in town. Affordable land values and fast internet will keep young people here, he said, and noted that he had attended WiredWest meetings in search of information. He does have questions about the cost projections, and was looking for further detailed information in order to "talk intelligently" about the issue.

(Mr. Klein interjected that it had been decided that the first 750 feet of hook-up from the road was to be provided by WiredWest free of additional charge.)

Scott Jenssen, current select board member, had a question for Mr. Sylbert. According to Mr. Jenssen, when Mr. Sylbert resigned from the board, he "defamed" Mr. Jenssen and Mr. Burkhart with his complaint of a violation of the open > meeting law. Further investigation from the attorney general cleared them both of this charge. Had it occurred to Mr. Sylbert in the years since to apologize, and to address it with his former board members?

Mr. Sylbert welcomed the question, saying that open meeting law complaints were filed "all the time," and that this law was a critical part of local government. At the time of his resignation he'd been recommending the town look for a way to pay less than the then-90% of a town employee's health insurance. According to him, an executive session was illegally scheduled to discuss the issue, and he advised against having the meeting. Further, he doesn't feel he owes an apology, because filing the complaint was his right. Mr. Sylbert said that if he'd done something wrong, he would be interested in hearing about it.

One questioner, pointing out that we have one of the smallest school districts in the area, wanted to know what each candidate's views were on education in Monterey.

Mr. Weisz said that the school districts were under a "terrible burden." Monterey's one-room schoolhouse was one of only three left in the state. He advised that people were mistaken in the belief that closing the Monterey school would magically "fill the holes in the budget," and that in fact each taxpayer in the school district might realize (according to his research) about a two-dollar-per-year difference in tax burden. He proposed to push to keep the school in Monterey, and warned that the mere threat of closing it may be partially responsible for low enrollment.

Mr. Sylbert countered that Monterey was probably not the smallest school district, and warned that consolidation was inevitable. He pointed out the recent decision on a twenty-five-year roof in a district that doesn't have twenty-five years left. He has a record, however, of defending the school "tooth and nail," and at one time spent six months negotiating with five other towns to prevent a state takeover. He turned to the audience and posed this question: If the town wants the school to be open next year, they would have to do something radical. Do they want it to stay open? If they do, they best show up at town meeting to support the school.

Pat Salomon directed a question to Mr. Sylbert. She stated that he brought his skill and analysis to a "breaking point" and hurt the town, rather than working out a compromise at the time of his resignation. While she respected his principles, she wondered if he is today in a "different place" as far as collective decision-making with the a board.

Mr. Sylbert said that the real reason for his resignation was a lack of communication that had reached a state of dysfunction. He had supported the town employees for ten years, asked if all parties could meet halfway, was told (as he put it) "nope," and so felt he lacked support to continue on the board.

However, in his further defense, he continued to write about the issue, and kept pushing for lower health insurance compensation for town employees, and in time the policy was changed. The same employees who fought him in that policy change were now, he said, "begging him" to get back on the board, which explained his presence there before the questioner.

Both candidates then had an opportunity to make closing statements, beginning with Mr. Weisz. He pointed out that he would not be a king, a president, or a mayor, and felt it would be important to serve with Mr. Jenssen and Mr. Basler. What is most important, he said, is the fashion in which you have the conversation in pursuit of "doing the people's work."

Mr. Sylbert jokingly wondered if Mr. Weisz thought he, Mr. Sylbert, in fact wanted to be king; in actuality, he felt that in the past he had worked well with the large number of people he'd come across, encouraged people to stick up for what they want, and would like to put them "in the driver's seat." He went on to address the "tough" tax burden on lower income people in town, and mentioned a residential property tax exemption, which could cut off the bottom $60,000-$100,000 from property assessments. It is an example of a progressive tax policy "worth looking into."

Once the select board candidates were done, an invitation to other candidates to stand and introduce themselves went out. Ian Jenkins, candidate for a five-year term on the zoning board of appeals, stood and gave a short speech about his views on the role of the ZBA, which are also in his candidate statement in this issue.

May at the Knox Gallery

Painter Dee Shapiro developed and curated our next Knox Gallery exhibit, Tailored: Stitched, Patched, Threaded, & Pinned, which features works by Miriam Dym, Michael Ensminger, Colab LoVid, Jessica Rosner, Barbarie Rothstein, Karen Shaw, Suzan Shutan, Debra Smith, and Audrey Stone. The work Shapiro selected from these artists illustrates their use of the tools and techniques of tailoring to create unique works of art. The exhibiting artists, who utilize thread, pins, and fabric—whether sewn, assembled, or patched—to create unique works of art, are based throughout New England and New York and have exhibited at galleries and museums nationally and internationally.

The exhibit will open Friday, May 8, with a reception the next evening, Saturday, May 9, from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Shapiro will talk about the exhibit and the participating artists beginning at 6 p.m.

Knox's co-director, Julie Shapiro (no relation), had asked Shapiro if she would be interested in curating an exhibition for us. At the time, Dee Shapiro was researching material for a biography of her grandmother. Shapiro was drawn to the work of numerous artists who use the same materials her grandmother—a garment worker in New York City who had sewn all her life—used, but in entirely different ways. We are all familiar with the functional and decorative uses of tailoring, but this exhibit crosses the line of that expectation. These beautiful and interesting two- and three-dimensional pieces surely do not resemble the results of her grandmother's efforts.

Shapiro's own work, in which she currently uses collage and focuses on pattern, will not be featured in this exhibition but will comprise a solo show at Five Points Gallery in Torrington, CT, during the month of July. She has participated in several Knox Gallery group shows, and her work is included in university, corporate, and private collections and in museums, including the Guggenheim Museum. She teaches at SUNY Empire State and writes and curates between paintings. Shapiro lives in New York City and maintains a residence in Colebrook, Connecticut.

Community Potluck Supper May 20

Chief Backhaus and Sergeant Johnson did a much-appreciated presentation on identity theft at the April 15 potluck, despite the fact that they had not received many handouts from the state. They showed a great video on how to protect your important information: NO! Don't throw your financial papers into the paper recycling at the transfer station! Even in Monterey, that's not safe. If anyone is interested, there will be handouts available soon at the town hall.

For our next potluck, we are very excited to present a documentary that was recently shown at the Berkshire Festival of Women Writers, Disruption, by Pamela Yates. A band of Latin American activist economists partnering with women marginalized by poverty sets out to change their region, and challenge accepted notions of how to eradicate inequality. Through this program, the women become empowered economic and political agents in their communities. If the model is scaled up, could twenty million women up-end a continent?

The next Monterey community potluck dinner will be held in the fellowship hall of the Monterey meetinghouse on May 20, at 6 p.m. Please bring a dish to share with a serving utensil and a place setting and silverware for yourself. Everyone is welcome.

School District News

Budget for 2015-2016

The school committee and the administration worked hard to bring the member towns a budget for fiscal year 2016 that reflects our commitment to keeping costs manageable for taxpayers. The administration level- or negative-funded every line item that fell within their discretion. The resulting budget had an increase of 3.34%. This increase is the result of contractual commitments that must be honored and a one-time increase in the cost of health insurance.

At this point, any further cutting would result in the loss of teaching positions and programs. There is nothing else left to cut. We are proud of our district: state robotics champs for the third year in a row, national recognition for our outstanding music education program, and our high school was named one of the top high schools in the country by U.S.

News and World Report. We do not want to jeopardize the quality education we're providing children in this district, and we want to keep drawing more families to our area with our commitment to education. I hope we have your support for our annual budget and I welcome any questions you may have before town meeting.

Mt. Everett Roof and Boilers

Thank you to all the Monterey residents who braved the cold of February to come to the special town meeting to vote on the school district's boiler and roof project. All five member towns approved the bond for the project, securing the participation of the Massachusetts School Building Authority (MSBA) in moving this project ahead at a 39% savings to our taxpayers. We are currently taking bids on the project and hope to complete it before the start of the 2015-2016 school year.

Return of the Wood Duck

As the ice moved out in April with warming temperatures across the Berkshires, migratory waterfowl dropped in with whistling wings to the first liberated waters along the edges of lakes, ponds, and streams. Among them came Wood Ducks. According to Jody Soules of Wild Birds Country Store in Great Barrington, who sells Wood Duck nesting boxes, the females are ready to lay between seven and fifteen eggs that incubate for an average of thirty days before hatching in May.

Jody tells me that if nesting boxes are placed too close together, females may lay eggs in their neighbors box, which then may contain as many as thirty eggs that will get only partial incubation. According to Ducks Unlimited, Wood Ducks choose their nesting cavities during the period prior to their fall migration. In the early spring, they're able to return to the same locations and begin their nesting very quickly. Jeff Mosher at the hatchery has installed two nest boxes in the roadside fishing pond, well spaced out, and over water for a special reason.

A safe nesting site is paramount for all wildlife. Wood Ducks may choose to nest in the cavity of a tree as high as fifty feet above the ground to thwart the possible threat of a climbing predator. Wood Ducks also have sharp claws at the ends of webbed feet and for that reason are known as perching ducks, comfortable high up in the trees.

The day after hatching, the ducklings are called by their mother to leap down and follow her to swim and find food such as seeds, berries, and acorns. When ducklings are called by their mother, even if high over land (according to Dick Tryon who has seen this spectacle), those ducklings unable to fly are so light and fluffy they literally bounce off the ground for a soft landing, ready to head for water.

Mothering in all wild birds is exemplary, and the selection and protection of nesting sites is critical. The mother Partridge or Killdeer Plover along Gould Road will feint a broken wing and flop down in front of a predator to draw it away from the nest. The Woodcock on Wellman Road who thinks her nest has been discovered will move her eggs by picking them up, one by one, between her legs and flying low over the ground to a more secret location.

More remarkable is the Wood Duck's distinctive appearance. The males have bright red eyes, an iridescent, crested-shaped head, and multi-colored body plumage. The females are less colorful, but with teal-colored wing tips. They usually see you before you see them. When flushed, the male emits a rising whistle, jeeee-jeeee, and the females a drawn-out squeal, do-weep, do-weep. The Wood Duck may look like a duck and walk like a duck, but like it's nearest relative, the Asian Mandarin Duck of China and Japan, it doesn't quack like a duck.

They may be found along the edges of the wooded shores of Lake Garfield, or perched on fallen tree trunks near marshes along New Marlboro, Mount Hunger, or Hupi Roads. The expanding beaver population has also created wetland nesting and rearing sites, so look for them near beaver ponds. Wood Duck populations have increased due to the work of people purchasing and placing nesting boxes in favorable habitats. Also, limiting the numbers taken during waterfowl hunting season to only two per day has been critical, as, next to the Mallard, they are the most hunted duck in America.

The migratory return and increased numbers of Wood Ducks is rewarding for bird watchers, especially when successful reproduction produces hatchlings on parade before our very eyes, living proof of an unbroken chain of their seasonal renewal!

Peace and Plenty

The jet lifted off from a Santiago runway, and as it rose higher I watched the cordillera grow smaller. Thirty-one years ago, I was on my way home to mi casa en el Norte, as I might have said in my stumbling Spanish, after twelve weeks in Chile. In South America, folks experience May as a calendar-equivalent to our November, so fall was just beginning to slide toward winter when my plane took off.

Stepping into a Berkshire May morning less than a day later sent shock waves through me. I drank in our spring wealth, all blue, green, and birdsong. I inhaled air fragrant with apple blossoms. My friends, my home, my work were all waiting for the happy reunion we shared. So why, thirty-one years later, do I still remember that I'd been crying on the plane long after the cloud cover hid the Andes from sight?

I cried when I left Chile because my journey had been so rich and, though three months long, so brief. After arriving, I grabbed a few hours of sleep in Santiago, then traveled twelve hours due south from Santiago by train, bus, van, and river ferry to Temuco, Coipue, and Luz del Sur; then all three Villarricas: the volcano, the national forest, and the town. After a couple of months in the south, I swung back to Santiago for a trek twelve hours due north by bus, and then a few hours further—seated on my luggage in the back of a pickup truck—to the ashram where I spent Easter. Then south again for my last weeks in Santiago. My trek spanned the narrow country from Vina del Mar on the Pacific coast to an Indian reservation on the Argentine border. I met people from all three Americas: Chile, Ecuador, Bolivia, Guatemala, the US, and Canada. I met others from Germany, from England, and from India. I met Chileans who were educated in Europe and others who'd never traveled more than fifteen miles from their birthplaces.

What broke my heart, even to come back here, was leaving the people. Everywhere I went, I was welcomed and made to feel at home. Everywhere I went, I was surrounded by folks whose hearts were rich with peace and plenty. Even in the midst of the political regime headed by Pinochet. Even after we'd navigated a couple of earthquakes.

Monterey is almost exactly due north of the Pacific coast of Chile. I never noticed that bit of trivia until I made the trek back and forth. Now I wonder if there's something about longitude, as well as attitude, here. Maybe we live on some kind of geographic ley line where the people make the place.

It's spring and war is blooming over Baghdad
Yet my soul still sings as cells remember
The smell and touch to fingers and feet

Sweet for easy-pulling weeds to uncover
New growth shooting up to the sun

The contrast is not graspable

Monterey's Broadband Future

WiredWest bond vote
Friday, May 8, at 7 p.m.

The time has come for us to take action to ensure Monterey remains a desirable place to live, work, retire or raise a family. We have a very special town, but the lack of high-speed internet is hurting many residents, and will impact everyone in the coming years if we don't take action to bring twenty-first century telecommunications infrastructure here.

WiredWest is all of us. It's a municipal lighting plant (MLP) cooperative that allows towns to cooperatively finance, build, and operate telecommunications networks. Monterey created an MLP within the town in 2011 and became a charter member of WiredWest. This is the best way to bring true broadband to Monterey. Recently the FCC upgraded the definition of broadband as 25 mbps download speed. In Monterey, those people who do have access to DSL service typically have only 2.8 mbps, putting us in the bottom 20% nationwide, and we still have households relying on dial-up connections.

The Reasons for WiredWest

Universal Coverage

The WiredWest plan ensures everyone in town that wants service will have access. Verizon has clearly stated that they intend to get out of the copper landline business. Private telecom companies have not and will not do that in rural towns. Instead, they "cherry pick" the most profitable customers, creating "digital dead zones" where they don't offer service. Today broadband is considered critical infrastructure, just like electricity, and everyone needs access.

Affordable Pricing

Because WiredWest is a municipal cooperative created by the towns, for the towns, we don't have to pay profits to shareholders or owners like a private business would. This means we can provide state-of-the-art internet, phone, and video services at affordable rates.

Internet packages start at speeds of 25 mbps, which is many times faster than any available alternatives, for $49/month. Bundled with phone, it's $74/month. And your phone will be crystal clear, even when it rains. Included in the basic package is the cost to install the first 750 feet to residences for people who sign up during the initial sign-up period. There will also be higher-speed packages and TV packages, as well as special pricing for seasonal residents. And no data caps like satellite or wireless on the amount of data you download every month.

High-Capacity, Reliable, Future-Proof Technology

Fiber is the gold standard for telecommunications networks, used today to transmit data at the speed of light around the world. It will provide more than enough capacity to last generations and meet our ever-increasing needs for bandwidth, supporting small business applications, streaming music and video, (including high-definition, and the coming ultra high-definition), file sharing, videoconferencing and telemedicine.

It will also better support mobile phones if you are without service. If you have fiber to your home, installing a cellular extender from the mobile provider of your choice will give you excellent cell service on your property.

State Subsidy

The state will cover about 35% of the cost for construction of a regional fiber network. This is an opportunity for us to build multigenerational infrastructure in our community for a significant discount.

Financial sustainability

A critical concern is that the operation be able to sustain itself through revenues to minimize the financial risk to towns. Multiple towns working together spreads the costs of operating the system across a larger subscriber base, offers economies of scale in construction and operation, and significantly reduces risks to towns of trying to operate their own town networks.

Additionally, the WiredWest model strives to minimize the financial burden to towns by:

- Imposing a minimum subscriber requirement of 40% that aligns with sustainability of the financial projections
- Structuring the model so that after all operational expenses and depreciation reserve are covered, remaining revenue is distributed back to the towns to cover debt service.

WiredWest has used very conservative assumptions for our revenue projections, and based on those, it appears debt service should be covered from year five or six onwards, which would eliminate the need for the town to pay debt service from property taxes in those years.

Making This Happen in Monterey

First, 40% of the households must sign a conditional commitment for service and make a refundable $49 deposit, to be applied towards the first month's bill. WiredWest will not build in a town until that condition is met, so please sign up at wiredwest.net and make sure all your friends and neighbors have as well.

Second, a two-thirds vote in a town meeting is needed to authorize borrowing the funds. Monterey must contribute its share of network construction costs, but only after the state puts in its money. At an estimated $1.9 million, this is a major commitment for Monterey, but a critical step towards securing our town's future. Our town meeting to consider this bond is scheduled for Friday, May 8, at 7 p.m., at the Monterey firehouse. There will be a presentation on the project prior to voting. Following are some important considerations for Monterey's participation and the bond vote.

Governance of WiredWest

A new WiredWest Cooperative will be formed that consists only of towns that are financially participating in the initiative. Joining requires only a vote of the select board. Voting in the new WiredWest Cooperative will be proportional based on the value of each town's financial contribution to the network, which is driven by each town's costs. Towns that delay passing the bond obligation can still be members of the newly-formed Cooperative, but will be without voting rights until the bond is passed.

Bond Passage Timing

The sooner a town fulfills the minimum subscribers and passes the bond, the sooner planning and construction will start, and the sooner we will have services available over the WiredWest network here in Monterey. Towns that delay passage of the bond also delay provision of service to local residents.

Minimizing Town Debt

Money for construction of the project is only raised as needed, to minimize borrowing costs. To reduce money borrowed and debt service, the state funding is the first money to be spent; the first two years are structured as interest-only; and some early revenues will go into capital costs.

During the first four to five years of construction, the towns will utilize low-interest instruments called Bond Anticipation Notes (BANs), which can be converted to a fifteen-year bond by year five. Such BAN payments are quite small and relatively insignificant, representing typically only a few thousand dollars in the first two years.

Starting in year three, the towns will start to pay partial principal. Any excess revenue that is generated by the towns that are lit (operating fiber) in the later part of year two, year three, and year four will be contributed to the cost of building the network. This will reduce the amount that each town will have to borrow in those years.

The precise strategies Monterey will utilize to raise the funds will be determined by our town treasurer, with advice from the town's financial advisor. >

Covering Town's Debt Service

Excess revenue is any money that is left over after paying cost of goods sold and operating expenses. From year four onwards, the revenue that WiredWest receives from subscriptions will go first to cover cost of goods sold, then to cover operating expenses, then to be set aside in the amount of depreciation reserve required by law, then to reimburse the towns for their debt service for that year.

The debt service reimbursement will be transferred to the town, which will be put into the town's general funds. That money will not be able to be spent by the town until the following year, when their free cash has been certified by the Department of Revenue.

WiredWest's projections indicate that if subscription rates meet expectations (equal to or greater than 40% of the premises), then revenues by that time will be sufficient to cover the cost of the debt payments, and with earlier year payments being modest, the towns may never realize any significant tax impact. In the later years, the projections indicate that excess cash will be generated after cost of goods sold, expenses, depreciation, and town debt service are paid. The board of WiredWest will decide at that time how to allocate any excess cash.

Bond Vote Failure

If the bond fails to pass, Monterey will not be part of the process of moving forward with planning and construction of the network, which then delays our town getting served with universal broadband. Monterey can reconsider the bond vote at a later meeting, but we will effectively stop the clock on bringing service here by delaying the passage of the bond authorization. Towns have until June 30, 2016 to vote to authorize their portion of the bond money to receive part of the state subsidy.

Monterey Community Center News

Looking for the ideal spot to hold your family reunion? Organizing a group to work on helping older folks stay in their homes and need a place to meet? The Monterey Community Center will be home to these uses and many more—meeting spot, classes, performances, after-school groups, senior citizen activities... We are getting closer to the reality of having the building ready to use, though this summer still promises to see a construction zone.

We will be hosting a summer-long series of outdoor events again this year, making use of the gorgeous grounds of the Wilson McLaughlin property just up the hill from the post office. You will be able to see the schedule on our website (ccmonterey.org), and in the Monterey News calendar, and also find posters around town announcing things as they are coming up.

- Saturday, May 23, 10 to noon: Bird walk with local birder Joe Baker. See some spring migrants! Donation $10. Please pre-register, 528-9385.
- Sunday, May 24, 10 to 1: Annual Seedling and Plant Sale at the Community Garden.

More details on the following in the June Monterey News:

- Saturday, June 13, outdoor yoga with local instructor Connie Wilson.
- Saturday, June 20, painting workshop with local painter Kit Patten (cost TBD).
- Saturday, June 27, outdoor yoga with Tyringham instructor Tracy Remelius.
- Saturday, July 11, tag sale to benefit the MCC Meetings for a Monterey Drama Group (contact Maggie Barkin, mbar-kin@snet.net)

Other events will be announced in the coming months—look for yoga, wildflower class, painting workshop, and more.

In addition to visiting our website as a source of information, don't forget to follow us (and like us) on Facebook.

Eric Martin & Karen Axelrod Free Concert on May 22.

Please join us for "Dancing Ears: A Voyage in Traditional Dance Music for the Listener" on Friday, May 22, at 7:30 p.m. in the Monterey meetinghouse. The concert will feature Monterey resident Eric Martin on violin (fiddle), viola, and voice, along with Northampton-based musician extraordinaire Karen Axelrod on piano and accordion. Eric and Karen will perform traditional music from the British Isles, France, Scandinavia, Quebec, Appalachia, and beyond. Presented by the Monterey Cultural Council. —Eric Martin

POB 9 Support Steven Weisz

Monterey is facing one of the few times when an election involves more than one candidate running for a position. As a select board member, I urge every citizen to come out and vote. The position of select board has two candidates. I am asking for your vote to elect Steven Weisz. I feel that he is a fresh face, and seems to be very able to fulfill the position. With Steven as the third member of the board, I feel that this board will work together much more efficiently than if Mr. Sylbert were to be elected. It is to this end that the town really needs to have a smoothly operating board, not one with past emotions nor of ego.

Mr. Weisz has shown a true passion for the town and has committed himself to many different committees and studies. He is currently a member of the town hall restructure committee that has been working diligently for about four months on devising a set of plans to be presented to the board after the election. I feel that his contributions of late show that he is ready and willing to be a member and get to work with both Kenn and myself. I want to move forward, not backwards. Please do consider a vote for Steve as a vote for the betterment of Monterey. Feel free to call me or email me with any questions as to my feelings towards this important election.

Thank you.

WiredWest Opportunity for Monterey

There are many reasons to support the WiredWest initiative, and I would like to draw attention to several.

1. Our DSL service from Verizon used to be great (at least we could get it!), at a promised (not always delivered) speed of 2.8 mbps (the lower threshold for decent streaming from video services). The rest of the country, and much of the world, has moved way beyond that, to what is now the official standard of the FCC for “broadband” at 25 mbps, which is enjoyed by 80% of the US market. Hand-in-hand with that are higher and higher video resolutions, the ability to download and upload larger, more complex files, etc. We are literally being left in the dust.

2. Verizon has made clear, both regionally and nationally, that it is moving out of the copper landline business, and not just for internet access, but for phone service in many places—read: rural places with low population density (which should feel very familiar.) They are moving their business model to focus on cellular connections. Folks who have Verizon cell phones with no coverage in Monterey should feel a little unsure about what that means for them. For the rest of us, it could come to mean a big challenge in how we can communicate.

3. In the early days of the internet, connection was seen as an amenity, something that was peripheral to much of the economic and social activity in our culture. Large print ads would have small type directing people to their websites—how novel! The internet now is absolutely central to our culture, whether you go online much or not. So it stands to reason that this now has a big impact on how people make choices over products, services, jobs, and living locations. Wendy’s son is an electrical engineer for a Swiss company working in the power industry. He lives in Southampton, MA, and works from home five days a week. His wife is a clinical engineer at Bay State Medical Center, and she works from home two days a week. Is it likely that a couple like that would even entertain the notion of buying a house in Monterey, with poor or no internet connection and no prospect of it improving? Small creative businesses can locate anywhere now—do you think they would move here?

4. Three important things to keep in mind with the upcoming bond vote.

- The towns that are in earliest are the first towns that will get built out.
- Towns have only until the end of June in 2016 to join the bond obligation if they want the 35% share of the cost that the state will provide.
- Recently WiredWest decided to include 750 feet of connection expense (for residences that do not have special conditions) for those customers who sign up “in the initial signup period”, which means soon.

5. The reasons for making accessible to every home a technology whose capacity is very close to unlimited will never get any better than they are now. Delaying will not bring greater opportunity in the future, and very likely will involve considerably greater expense to the town, and to individuals.

I encourage everyone to attend the special town meeting at 7 p.m. on May 8. There should be opportunities to ask all the questions you want, and the bond requires a two-thirds vote to pass. If you are interested in joining the rest of the country, do not rely on others to make it happen.

The Tallest Flowers of Spring

Spring has come late and sudden, with crocuses and daffodils jumping out overnight where lately there were two feet of snow. Some of us are shocked, taken by surprise, feel the breath knocked out. Mud season ran by so fast, maybe it took place under the snow. Now, with the sun so strong and long, we better look up one more time, before the overbearing green comes out, the canopy that can drive people westward, or out to sea, longing for sky and distance.

In May the leaves have not yet closed in. What comes first on the trees, are those tallest of flowers. Around here the red maples put out their pom-poms and sugar maples make graceful pale blooms, drooping way up high. Some folks will have clipped twigs from forsythia and pussy willows, bringing them inside to hurry along the blossoms. We can do this with any spring twigs, and some years I get in a slim beech branch so I can watch its leaf buds leaping out longer and pointier, with passing feathery edges before the leaf opens out of the long bud shape.

This year we have a jar on the windowsill with a black birch twig. I have known black birch twigs since earliest memory because my dad used to cut them for us to chew on. We nibbled the dark young bark and chewed it to get that sweet wintergreen flavor. I like to pass along this woody treat tradition, but it's not always easy because black birches grow tall and the tender bark is way up there on the new twigs. You have to be lucky and come upon a sapling, something you can bend over to get at the slender young twigs.

Black birch is common here, but not so easy to know. For one thing it looks something like a black cherry. In fact, one common name for it is "cherry birch," which refers to its appearance, not to a common fruit or flavor. The black cherry, also called rum cherry by some, has dark reddish bark when it is young. The bark is smooth and glossy, the leaves oval and occurring in an alternate pattern: one on the right the next on the left, then on the right again. The bark has horizontal breathing slits called lenticels, which are quite visible and distinctive. So far, the cherry resembles the young black birch in many ways. If the leaves are out, you can notice a difference in shape at the base, where the stem is attached, but if it is the middle of winter, with no leaves, you may need to take a nibble of the bark. The cherry is bitter, the black birch sweet.

We used to be able to buy soda pop called birch beer. In earlier times this was made from the sap of black birch trees. Some people still tap the birches, as if they were sugar maples, and boil down the sap to make syrup. Maple sap gives you a pint of syrup for forty pints of sap.

Birch sap isn't as sweet, so the ratio is more like one pint from eighty.

Years ago there was a wintergreen oil industry, distilling the black birch to make flavorful oil for use in all kinds of ways, from medicine to pleasure. Usually when we think of wintergreen oil, we assume it comes from the low-growing wintergreen plant. It can, and this is the very same thing chemically as comes from the black birch. The industry was based on the birches, though, and even as recently as 1950 there were some wood-fired stills in operation, making oil of wintergreen. People cut and chipped up black birch saplings. Then someone found the same oil could be made synthetically and more easily using wood alcohol and salicylic acid. Salicylic acid is a pain reliever, found in aspirins also in willow trees. Of course the chemists have figured out ways to put this ingredient together without going near a birch or a willow. Just go to the lab.

With spring here at last, it's a good thing for everyone to get out of the lab and into the woods. Look up for the black birch flowers. They come in two kinds, male or female. Both are catkins and have been present all winter. The males will be drooping and long, giving off pollen. The females look like little cones and stand up at the ends of short spurs or branches. By late fall or winter, the little three-lobed seeds will shake loose from those cones and be carried by the wind. If there is a crusty snow, they'll blow along on top. In April or May, whenever the snow is gone and the ground loosened, the seeds will warm up in a moist place and germinate after about a month.

Meanwhile, those similar-looking rum cherry trees will have gone their own way with a fleshy fruit, designed not to disperse on the wind but thanks to animals who eat cherries but then spit out the seeds or else don't digest them and leave them somewhere for sprouting in the spring. Some animals, like chipmunks (and me) like the almond-like nut inside the cherry pits. Chipmunks run up to the tops of the trees in the fall and nibble off the fruit, pack the pits into their cheek pouches, and come back down to store all those nuts somewhere. Bears eat cherries wherever they find them, often on the ground under the tree. Then the pits pass right through their systems unscathed. One year some of us were walking on Mt. Hunger on the Monterey Land Trust. We came to a place where there were at least a hundred tiny cherry trees coming up in less than one square foot, in the middle of the trail, well fertilized.

Dramatic changes come every day. There's just too much in any waking moment, so we have to make choices where to walk, where to look. Some days it's up, some days it's down, but there's always a great reward, especially in spring.

Council on Aging

The next "Off Your Rocker" group luncheon will be at noon on Tuesday, April 28, at the Farmington River Diner in Otis. The council will subsidize each meal $2 and the gratuity. Please contact Maryellen Brown (below) if you'll be there so we can give the diner a likely head count.

A bus trip is planned to the Clark Museum for Thursday, May 28. The thirteen-passenger bus will leave town hall at 10 a.m. to arrive at the museum by 11:30, with time for lunch before a guided tour at 1 p.m. Except for lunch this trip will be paid for by the Council on Aging. Reservation must be made with Maryellen Brown, 528-1598, or mbrown007@earthlink.net, by Friday, May 15.

Bidwell House Announces 2015 Season Program

The Bidwell House Museum, Monterey's own colonial history museum, announced its 25th anniversary season program today. The museum is featuring a series of events celebrating life in the Berkshires and New England, from the Native Americans to the first English settlers, to the mid-1800s. The history talk series will feature five authors and professors. A special workshop is planned with ecologist Tom Wessels, exploring how to "read the forested landscape" in a talk and walk on June 27.

The museum is inviting the whole community to the sixth annual Township Number 1 Day on Friday, July 3, to celebrate local history with fun events for all ages, and to the other season highlights: the opening concert on Sunday, May 24, featuring Diane Taraz singing and playing lap dulcimer, and the festive garden party benefitting the museum on August 15.

The Bidwell House Museum is a New England heritage site providing a personal encounter with history, early American home life, and the Berkshire landscape through its land, house, and collection. The museum is a nonprofit educational institution for the benefit of the community and today's audiences of all ages, dedicated to preservation, scholarship, and enjoyment of the landmark site.

Tours of the homestead tell the story of the early settlement of the Berkshires and of life on the frontier. The museum is open Thursdays through Mondays (closed Tuesdays and Wednesdays) from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. with tours on the hour, from Memorial Day to Columbus Day. The entire museum grounds—192 acres of woods, fields, historic stone walls, trails, and beautiful picnic sites—are open all year free of charge. The program of events can be found at bidwellhousemuseum.org.

2015 Season Program

May 24, Concert and Opening Reception: Tickle Me Fancy! What made people giggle in 1642? What tickled their funny bone in 1776, and what left them rolling in the aisles in 1847? Join Diane Taraz as she roams through the centuries, exploring how our sense of humor has evolved with songs and stories that lifted spirits and helped people survive challenging times. Diane will sing and play guitar and lap dulcimer at a special celebration to open the 25th anniversary season of the museum. Reception and Refreshments. Event free for members. 3 p.m.

May 28, Docent training workshop: 11 a.m. Interested? Please join us.

June 7, Gardening Program: 10 a.m.

June 13, History Detectives—Secrets of an Old House: Architectural historian Bill Finch and architect Steve McAlister will present what they discovered during their eight-month study of the Bidwell House building. They will explain techniques they used to investigate the house, construction techniques, and building materials, and what they discovered of its past. The Historic Structure Study was funded in part by a grant from the Massachusetts Historical Commission. 10 a.m.

June 20, History Talk: Women and Men—Gender Difference in Early America. John Demos, Samuel Knight Professor of American History Emeritus at Yale University will speak on his research of the roles of the sexes in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Held at Tyringham Union Church, Main Road, Tyringham. 10 a.m.

June 27, Special Workshop: Reading the Forested Landscape. Noted ecologist Tom Wessels will speak on his approaches to interpreting a landscape's history, using evidence on trees, stumps, vegetation, and topography. Talk and slideshow, 10–11:30 a.m., 11:30 BYO lunch and discussion, 12:30–2:30 p.m. exploration of the Bidwell Forest.

July 3, Bidwell House Museum Township No. 1 Day: A free community celebration of Tyringham and Monterey history. Colonial re-enactors, live music by local musicians, children's activities, baking contest, historic craft demonstrations, author talks, more... For details and individual event times, please check bidwellhousemuseum.org or call 528-6888. Supported in part by grants from the Monterey and Tyringham Cultural Councils. 1–4:00 p.m. Free. Monterey Library Notes

Evergreen, the software that CWMARS uses to connect more than 150 libraries, was just updated. The program allows patrons and staff to manage thousands of daily transactions. Some of the features updated should make it easier for you to use it. There are changes to the OPAC (online catalog) so you'll be able to separate out audio books and downloadable audio books. There are new icons that have further refined the item categories than before.

If you haven't started to manage your library account online, now is a good time to try. You'll be able to keep track of what you have out, renew online, and perhaps the best feature is that you can order anything in the system at any time. All you need is a CWMARS card, so come the Monterey Library if you don't have one already.

Turkey Time April in Monterey

We've had a great herd of turkey sightings in the last month, partly because there are many turkeys to be seen, but also because this is the time the toms are so showy. Carol Edelman, Suzanne Sawyer, Felix Carroll, and Roz Halberstadter have seen the males in full display, and they have seen flocks of females not far away in most cases. I saw a mixed group myself this morning on Cold Spring Road, and Cora Baker told me about turkeys enjoying dustbaths at her place.

Steve Snyder saw a Bald Eagle high in the sky over Main House at Gould Farm, many ducks on the ponds, and Cedar Waxwings and robins enjoying little fruits on the Bradford pear trees. The ducks so far have been Hooded Mergansers, Green Winged Teal, Wood Ducks, Black Ducks, and Mallards. We've had Wood Ducks here, too, on the pond at Cora Baker's house next door. (See George Emmons's article on Wood Ducks on p. 13.)

Some nature-noters have written in about Pileated Woodpeckers lately. At the end of March, Mary Kate Jordan saw one on an old birch near the house over by Stevens Lake. Suzanne Sawyer saw one in the wooded part of their yard, and one flew over our garden right after sunrise one morning. Suzanne also has a Red-Bellied Woodpecker coming every day, and Joe Baker and a friend heard a Yellow-Bellied Sapsucker drumming here on the east end of Hupi Road.

As for mammals, Cara Carroll saw one cross Tyringham Road, a teen-aged bear, she thinks. She swerved hard to miss it and is "still sore from swerving!" Ann and John Higgins saw a big bobcat, about the size of a golden retriever, cross Route 23 near Avalon School, and Scott Weingartner saw a similar big one, maybe even the same cat, stroll through the woods at his place on Corashire Road. Suzanne Sawyer tells of a mink crossing the road by Butternut in early April, and Steve Moore reports ten minutes of watching a Red Fox lying in the sun in the grass near his house.

Besides all these fine birds and mammals, we have frogs starting up in the ponds and vernal pools, also invertebrates in the form of ticks! Already at least one dog and one person have hosted ticks and lived to tell the tale. The person was the most nervous—not the dog, not the tick.

Thank you for all your reports. The coltsfoots are blooming along the gravelly road shoulders. This is our wild, alive world.

Transfer Station Kicking the Proverbial Can Down the Road

In 1982, the Monterey landfill closed and was replaced with the Monterey transfer station, which was designed and built to handle 300 tons of trash per year. In 1995, the Department of Environmental Protection granted an operational permit to the town and the transfer station and stated that "the facility shall not accept more than 400 tons per year." In 1997 the select board tasked the solid waste committee to come up with plans to deal with safety and structural concerns at the transfer station and the increased use that was approaching the 400-ton maximum. After many meetings, the committee realized that the transfer station needed much more than the original $10,000 estimate would cover.

Thus began the first of eighteen years of plans and proposals "kicked down the road" for lack of will and/or monies. The end of the road has arrived. While the original estimate was woefully underfunded, each year of inactivity has increased the dollar amount. Each year has brought new state regulations and each year has brought more trash (550 tons last year) that has to be handled in ever-more expensive ways. We can no longer put off what is needed at the transfer station, and for that reason the select board, director of operations, and a consultant from the Center for Ecological Technology looked at both renovating the existing facility or building a new facility.

To Renovate the Existing Transfer Station

The existing transfer station is located on a 300 x 300-foot site that cannot expand with Monterey's needs. The traffic flow creates dangerous safety issues that cannot be mitigated in the existing space. The concrete retaining walls that support the upper portion are failing and will have to be replaced. There are no safety railings in place. The state is taking a much closer look at the operations of transfer stations, and the initial proposals regarding space necessary for a safe operation would seriously impact our existing operation. and size of dumpsters necessary on the site. The location of the Swap Shop creates serious parking problems.

When you take the list of problems and begin to design solutions for them, you quickly realize what the original committee in 1997 learned—the site is inadequate. There is no design that can be developed that makes for a safe, convenient, and cost-effective operation within the restrictions of the existing space. If we were to try and correct the safety and failing structural problems, the estimated costs would be more than $150,000, and we would end up with a transfer station that still does not meet the needs of Monterey, let alone the needs of the future.

To Build a New Transfer Station

The existing transfer station sits on a ten-acre site that was at one time the town's landfill. Roughly fifty yards to the west and part of the ten-acre property is a flat and easily accessible site that the select board is proposing to use for a new transfer station.

Five years ago, the director of operations had a local engineering firm develop a preliminary plan for the site. Using that plan as a starting point, we are proposing to build a new transfer station that will meet all existing state and local codes, will be safe for the residents to use, and will be cost-effective in operations. It is only a matter of time until we have a serious accident or a structural failure at our transfer station. We cannot afford not to take action.

The estimated cost is over $300,000, but with proper management and cost control we can borrow at favorable rates for a ten-year note that we can fiscally handle without serious impact to our budget. Every time we put off a capital project, the costs go up. Let's take the responsible course of action and make the transfer station right.

Maps, designs, and more information will be available at the finance committee informational meeting on Saturday, April 25, at 10 a.m. at the town hall, and at town meeting on May 2, beginning at 9 a.m. at the firehouse.

A big “thank you” to the Monterey highway department for doing a tough job through a wild and record-breaking winter season. I live on a hilly, curvy road like most of us, and as an RN I have to work when I’m called for, not when I can. I had to leave the house and return at all hours of the day and night this winter and, aside from one early slush event, everything went smoothly. Thanks again!
